Sir

As the address of the enclosed letter had some resemblance to my christian name, and as no other person at the Hotel claimed it, I was led to suppose that it might perhaps have come from some one of my Correspondents who had omitted my surname in the hurry of dispatching the letter. I accordingly opened it, after some hesitation, last night, but immediately saw from the subscription that it was not intended for me. I have therefore taken the earliest opportunity of returning the letter to you, hoping that when you see

The Gentleman for whom it was meant, you will have the goodness to state to him the circumstances I have mentioned.

I have the Honour to be,
